The copyright owner, (composer or author) has the right to reproduce the copyrighted lyric, to create derivatives or variations of that lyric and to distribute it, to perform and display it publicly

Copyright owners generally have the right to authorise or prohibit any of the following in relation to their works:

Copying the work in any way, including typing or scanning into a computer or storing works in an electronic format (e.g. on a hard drive;

Issuing copies of the work to the public;

Renting or lending copies of the work to the public (except for lending under the Public Lending Right Scheme, such as public library loans;

Performing, showing or playing the work in public. For example, performing plays and music; playing sound recordings; showing films or videos; and replaying broadcasts in public;

Broadcasting the work or other communication to the public by electronic transmission. This includes putting copyright material on the Internet;

Making an adaptation of the work, such as by translating a literary or dramatic work, transcribing a musical work and converting a computer program into a different computer language or code.

Anyone doing any of the above, whether intentionally or not, without the permission or license of the copyright owner is infringing copyright.

Infringement can occur only if the whole or a substantial part of the work is involved. 'Substantial' is undefined, although case law suggests that content (e.g. key phrases, concluding remarks or headlines) in many cases is as significant as extent;
